TO: CITIZENS AND VISITORS OF YELLOWKNIFE:

As Yellowknife prepares to celebrate the Fiftieth Anniversary of its establishment, it gives me great pleasure to introduce this catalogue of its early records. Although the City has had a very short life when compared to the capitals of the Provinces or the Yukon Territory, it already has a history which is as fascinating and vital as any other Canadian city. One of the objects of the jubilee celebrations will be to make that history better known and to encourage its preservation.

In the past the City's own records have not always been treated with the care which they deserved. The earliest council minutes can no longer be found, and some more recent records have been disfigured by damp and mould. Now all this has changed. Those records of continuing historical importance have been transferred to the Northwest Territories Archives in the Prince of Wales Northern Heritage Centre. They have been cleaned and arranged in order. Copies of the missing minutes have been found in Ottawa and photocopies made for Yellowknife. All this work has been carried out by the staff of the Northwest Territories Archives during the past year.

The result of this co-operation between the City and Territorial Governments is that the City's early records can now be consulted in comfort in the Archives reading room. At the same time you can also see photographs taken by early settlers in Yellowknife, the Territorial Council records which show how it became the first municipality in the Northwest Territories, and archives of different local organizations. I hope the citizens and visitors of Yellowknife will use these facilities not only during 1984 but in future years to discover something of our past.

INTRODUCTION

Yellowknife

The first settlement at Yellowknife began about 1934. In that year work began on the rich gold claims just south-east of the city and the Con and Giant gold mines were first staked. This was followed by a rush of prospectors to the area and a rapid increase in the population. By 1939 ten claims had been staked in the immediate area and about as many again within a sixty-mile radius of Yellowknife. In 1940 four groups of mines were in progress - Ptarmigan, Negus, Giant, Con and Rycon. The rapid rise of white population in an area which had previously supported only a small population of natives created problems never before encountered in the Northwest Territories. From the summer of 1939 the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were coping with an increasing amount of crime and requests for assistance from the Yellowknife area. This underlined the need for some kind of local organization and an increase in all kinds of facilities and administration. The Territorial Council and the Department of Mines and Resources (profiting by their early experiences with the development of the Norman Wells oilfields) were soon aware of these needs, but hampered by financial restraints.

In May 1938 the settlement was sufficiently large for the Department to survey the immediate area and make provision for leases to be issued to those already squatting on Crown lands. An Order in Council of 3rd May 1939 defined the area of the settlement. It included Latham and Jolliffe Islands (called islands A & B) and an area of 410 acres on the mainland which stretched inland as far as the present 45th Street on the south. This is the area now known as Old Town. The leases to be issued to squatters and to new settlers were not to include mineral rights and the working mines were not included in the area. However, the establishemnt of a settlement made no provision for local government or facilities of any kind. Although the rents received for the lots provided some additional revenue for the Territorial government, it was clearly insufficient to provide much help.

As early as 1937 the Minister of Mines and Resources was expressing concern about conditions in Yellowknife Settlement. At that time (and until the outbreak of World War II) there was no public school, no public water or electricity supply, no hospital and few other facilities. It is clear from the minutes of the Territorial Council that the more permanent residents of the Settlement were greatly concerned about the lack of a local council. Drunkenness and prostitution were serious problems in the area which the small Royal Canadian Mounted Police detachment were unable to control. The absence of cells or guardroom for detaining prisoners made their task especially difficult.

At the beginning of 1939 the Territorial administration in Ottawa began to grapple with the problem of providing local government services in Yellowknife. There was no provision for the establishment of district or settlement councils in the Territories at this time, so the first requirement was to establish whether this should be done under federal or territorial legislation. On 11th April 1939 the Territorial Council was informed that it had the right to legislate in such matters. A report from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police submitted to the same meeting underlined the need to take action. There had been great difficulty in enforcing the Liquor Ordinance, but it was hoped that the establishment of a liquor store in Yellowknife (to be operated by the Saskatchewan Liquor Board) would help. The police were trying to reduce the incidence of prostitution by sending women out of the Territories. Efforts were being made to rent accommodation for the police and to relieve them of some non-judicial duties. It was hoped to prevent an outbreak of typhoid by various precautions including a summer piped water supply to be installed by the Department of Public Works.

The Council was also informed that the inhabitants of Yellowknife were divided in opinion about the type of council which was needed. A proposal for a council of five or seven persons (two or three elected and two or three nominated) meeting under the chairmanship of the local magistrate was accepted by the Council and steps were taken to prepare an Ordinance to this effect. It is indicative of the situation that although the Ordinance was to be called the Local Trustee Board Ordinance and could be applied to all parts of the Territories, the minutes of the Territorial Council repeatedly called it a Yellowknife Local Affairs Ordinance. In the draft submitted to Council on 2nd June 1939 there was to be a local trustee board to advise the Commissioner "on local questions of self-government". After giving public notice the Commissioner could establish the boundaries of a local district, arrange for the annual election of two members, and appoint three other members (of whom one would be nominated as chairman). The voters were to be all adult British subjects who had resided in the district for at least 30 days. Although described as advisory the Board had the right to levy taxes on property and persons and to carry out a wide range of municipal duties similar to those listed in most provincial legislation. On 26th June, after further consideration, the Council decided that the Board should also act as the Public School Board for Yellowknife.

On 3rd July the draft reappeared as the local Administrative District Ordinance and with a few amendments was passed into law.* The most important of these were the provision of health and welfare services, a water supply and fire department, and the right of the Commissioner to veto any by-law. It was for this reason that the Territorial Council minutes include copies of the Board minutes and by-laws for many years. On 19th July the Deputy Commissioner visited Yellowknife with a group of officials representing Mines and Resources, Public Works, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and Wood Buffalo Park to talk with a committee representing the residents of the settlement. The usual complaints were aired and the committee suggested that some of their financial problems would be solved if the Board was allowed to run a community club where beer might be drunk. Although the opening of the liquor store had helped to combat drunkenness, there was still nowhere in Yellowknife for public drinking. Further consideration of this unorthodox proposal was deferred by the Territorial Council. On 11th September the Council agreed to establish a district to extend three miles from the Yellowknife post office in all directions. It also agreed to the election of a School Board for Yellowknife with a membership separate from that of the Board.

There was some opposition from officials of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company who did not wish to have their property assessed for municipal taxes. One expressed the opinion that the Yellowknife Settlement should be closed down - presumably intending it to be replaced with a company town operated by themselves. Their objections ceased when the Deputy Minister reminded the company that many of the local costs were being met by Ottawa and that the "two mining companies should have no difficulty in electing one member of the council, and I can assure you that the position of the mining industry will be kept in mind when the three members are being appointed". On 5th December 1939 the superintendent of Negus Mines and the district manager of Consolidated were in fact returned at the head of the poll. Two weeks later the Commissioner appointed a lawyer as chairman and two storekeepers as members. From 1st January 1940, Yellowknife had its own council - the first in the Northwest Territories. The first meeting of the Board took place on 17th January when Albert F. Totzke was appointed Secretary-Treasurer. He was the manager of the local liquor store and so considered qualified to keep accounts and minutes.

The outbreak of World War II in September 1939 had a depressing effect on Yellowknife. Many of its inhabitants volunteered to serve in different capacities in the south and overseas. As a result the mines found it difficult to recruit sufficient staff and two of the mines - Ptarmigan and Negus ceased production. Yellowknife began to expand again in 1946 when the end of fighting stimulated the demand for gold.

There were no further changes in the constitution of the Settlement Board until 1947 when two amending Ordinances were passed (15 April and 22 October). The first regulated elections and gave additional powers to the Board. The second, which came into effect in 1948 gave the Board an elected majority for the first time - five out of a total of nine members. In 1950 (chapter 1) the number of nominated members was reduced to three and an Ordinance (chapter 9) was passed to protect the water supply of Yellowknife from pollution.

In 1951 the general Ordinance for local administrative districts was replaced by a Yellowknife Local Administrative District Ordinance (chapter 12). By this Ordinance the number of board members was reduced to eight, of whom five were elected and three appointed by the Commissioner. The Yellowknife District was also defined as being all the land within a fifteen mile radius of lot 1, block 2.

In June 1953 the Legislative Assembly passed a Municipal District Ordinance (chapter 53). Although the general ordinance repeated the early provision of five elected and three appointed members to each council, the Yellowknife Ordinance amended it to a mayor (instead of a chairman) and eight elected members, all of whom served for two years. This Ordinance also repeated the 1951 definition of Yellowknife's boundary. Minor changes were made to the Municipal District Ordinance in 1956 (chapter 6), 1957 (chapter 6) and 1959 (chapter 7), but there were no major alterations until 1963.

The Municipal Ordinance (1963, chapter 19) effectively repealed both the 1953 Ordinances and gave every municipality a mayor and eight elected councillors. A provision allowing the Commissioner to change this to a mayor and six elected councillors was not to apply to Yellowknife.

In 1963 another comprehensive Municipal Ordinance was passed (chapter 19). It categorised municipalities as cities, towns, villages and hamlets, and gave the Commissioner powers to establish them in specified circumstances. The councils of cities and towns continued to be the mayor and eight councillors, elected for two years. Under this Ordinance Yellowknife remained a town for the next seven years.

In 1967 the Territorial Government removed from Ottawa, which had been the Territorial capital since 1922, to Yellowknife. On 1st January 1970 Yellowknife became the first city in the Territories. The first change was part of the Canadian Centennial celebrations. There have been no legislative changes of importance to Yellowknife since 1970.

The Records

Two major accessions and several minor are listed here. In August 1979 City Council transferred the council minutes from 1946 to 1962 to the Northwest Territories Archives, and in August 1982 it added the minutes from 1963 to 1971 as well as a large quantity of files and other papers stored in the basement of old City Hall. Both groups of minutes were in good physical condition, but it was soon discovered that the minutes from the establishment of municipal government in January 1940 until September 1946 had been lost. The records from old City Hall had been kept for several years in an unheated building and had suffered from dampness and mould. Arrangements were made to clean and treat these documents.

It was fortunate that until 1967 copies of all minutes, by-laws and monthly financial statements had to be sent to the Territorial Commissioner in Ottawa. These are now preserved in the Public Archives of Canada (RG 85, 1403, 520-2-1,1). Copies of the missing minutes were obtained from Ottawa. They are to be found in section 1 of this finding aid. It should be noted that these are not part of the city records, but are listed here for the convenience of users. Copies of later council minutes, which are not in the Public Archives of Canada, can be found in the Territorial Government records in the Northwest Territories Archives. A few other early minutes can be found in the Territorial Council minute books (GCOO 1/9).

Other series of records listed here are also not part of the city's archives, but were transferred at different times to the City Clerk for safekeeping. They are:

a) Section 4. The 1967 Centennial Committee included members of the town council as well as other organizations in Yellowknife. It was administered from City Hall and the records were left there after the committee was dissolved.

b) Section 12. For a period between 1956 and 1961 the Board of Trade operated out of City Hall, but its records are clearly distinguished from those of the city.

c) Section 22. The records of the committee which organized the annual children's Christmas Party were given to the City Clerk on 6th October, 1965 for safekeeping.

d) Section 24. Some of the historical miscellanea was probably donated to the City by interested citizens.

Correspondence

Very little correspondence of the Board before 1946 has survived. The earliest extant files (listed in 23/4) were arranged on a similar plan to that then used by the Territorial Administration until about 1953. It is distinguished by numbers preceded by the letters AD (for Administrative District). It used the same file covers as Northern Affairs. Since the first Secretary-Treasurer of the Board also worked for the Territorial Government it is hardly surprising that he used Federal stationery for files and for financial records. After he resigned in 1946 a new system was introduced. Files were arranged alphabetically by subject heading and then numbered within each sequence (e.g. C 12). A list of these files can be found in 23/4. After about two years it was replaced by a system arranged alphabetically by subject headings, but without any file references. In 1963 it was decided to close most of these files each year, but otherwise the system remained unchanged until 1970, after which date few files have yet been transferred to the Northwest Territories Archives.

The use of subject headings suffered from the usual lack of definition, so that a subject can be found in more than one file. As far as possible all the surviving files have been arranged in one alphabetical sequence. Titles have been standardized where possible and cross-references added where this was not possible. Cross-references have also been added where papers in later sections related to the subjects of correspondence files. Where a series of files relate to the same subject the cross-reference is to the first file only. Few correspondence files (usually only empty file covers) have been destroyed.

Financial Records

The principal, and only complete, series of financial records eventually proved to be the summary accounts (section 19). These are copies of the monthly and annual statements sent to the Territorial Commissioner in Ottawa from 1940 to 1967. Unlike the early minutes mentioned above these are part of the City's archives and original documents. Seven of the files contain correspondence between Ottawa and Yellowknife about discrepancies in the accounts. As noted above, other copies of these statements are available at the Public Archives of Canada (RG 85).

Only incomplete series of assessment rolls, account books and cash books have been transferred to the Northwest Territories Archives. Considerable quantities of receipt books, cancelled cheques and other vouchers have been destroyed and only those for the first few years of the municipality's existence have been kept (sections 17 and 18).

By-Laws

The original sealed copies of the by-laws have been retained by the City Clerk for administrative reasons. However, some copies of early by-laws have been preserved in the Territorial Council minutes (GCOO 1/9-20) now in the Northwest Territories Archives and many others at the Public Archives of Canada (RG 85). Section 20 of this handlist includes four compilations of by-laws current at different periods in the sixties, but there is no complete set of by-laws, only a list at the beginning of 20/2 and 3.
